Am I a Veteran eligible for State benefits?

For most purposes the term “Veteran” is used to mean someone who has, in the past, served in one of the U.S. armed services and is now a civilian.

However, many states’ Veteran benefits are limited to those with an honorable discharge or at least require the character of discharge to be other than dishonorable.

Generally, the term “Veteran” does not include anyone currently on active duty.

However, some benefits may also be available to those on active duty or to current members of the National Guard or Reserves. (These exceptions can be identified by your State Department of Veteran Services.)

Are some U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs services and benefits duplicated by the states?

Yes, there are multiple Veteran services and benefits that are offered by both the U.S. Department of Veteran Affairs and states. Cemeteries, Veteran Homes and assistance filing claims and appeals are the more common services offered by both the U.S. Department of Veteran Affairs and states.

Because each state has their own Department of Veteran Services, there is sometimes confusion among Veterans as to exactly who they are engaging. When interacting with officials regarding these and other services, ensure you know if you are interacting with a representative of the U.S. Government or your state government.

OTHER QUESTIONS YOU MAY HAVE

Other than the State Department of Veteran Services, are there other state agencies that offer Veteran benefits?

→ In most states there are numerous other agencies offering Veteran benefits. Examples of these agencies may be (not an all-inclusive list)

- State Dept of Labor
- State Dept of Education
- State Dept of Health
- State Dept of Human Services
- State University System State
- State Dept of Motor Vehicles

Can State Departments of Veteran Services assist in making a benefit claim or appealing a VA decision?

→ Yes, these agencies can absolutely assist you in filing claims for benefits, filing appeals and many other interactions with VA. States generally operate under one of two systems: the state employs Veteran Service Officers directly or the individual counties employ the Veteran Service Officer. Regardless who employs a service officer, you can find the closest one by:

- Calling the State Department of Veteran Benefits at the number listed on the left side of the page
- Online by accessing the web links for the State Department of Veteran Benefits listed on the left side of the page

When I transitioned from the military, I was asked which state I intended to go and that state was indicated on my DD214. What is the purpose of this?

→ DOD notifies the State Veteran Services Department that you are a new Veteran arriving in that state

→ Most states contact Veterans soon after they transition to welcome them and to offer assistance with accessing benefits and services
